Provisions has advanced in last quotations, beef, salt pork, etc., 2 or 3 per cent above rates of 7th inst., flour in extreme rates.

Breadstuffs slightly increased.

The Atlantic brings dates from Liverpool to 11th. The markets same as given this morning. Fine Mess Pork much wanted. Lard sold at $6.75 per 100 lbs. Coffee still in London Market. Fifth light stock of wheat and few buyers, trade dull. Moderate business in barley, English wheat at 42@45¢. Stock market Comptols for account, 97¢.

The general news is not very important.

The details of the late attempt to assassinate the Queen of Spain have been reported in England. As her Majesty was leaving Church, bearing the royal infant in her arms on February, a Jesuit priest, named Moyno, while kneeling, affected to present a petition and immediately struck at the Queen with a poniard, which drew from her a slight wound.

The weapon penetrated the folds of her dress but striking the whalebone of her stays, its point was diverted, as well as the force of the blow. The dagger consequently merely cut below the last rib, causing only a slight flesh wound. A second blow inflicted a wound on the heart.

The assassin was instantly secured. He proved to be a villain of the deepest dye by turns a priest, a murderer and a usurper, and always a drunkard.

The Queen behaved with surprising fortitude and largely recovered from the first shock of the blow, earnestly inquired after her child.

A telegraphic despatch from Madrid, the 1st, says that this P.M., at a quarter past one o'clock, the assassin was executed. He is tried by the Senate, which is alone competent to try cases of high treason.

ENGLAND.
In the House of Commons, Monday, Lord John Russell introduced the long promised measure of Parliamentary Reform.

Its main features are a reduction of the county franchises from fifty pounds to twenty, and of the Borough franchise from ten to five. In the case of county franchises, the franchise will be limited to a decreased number of voters in each county.

The right to vote will be restricted to those who have paid taxes for three years, and to those who have been assessed to pay taxes for three years.

A telegraphic despatch from Madrid, the 1st, says that this P.M., at a quarter past one o'clock, the assassin was executed. He is tried by the Senate, which is alone competent to try cases of high treason.

Lord Russell's speech was immediately followed by a discussion in which several of the leading members of all parties took a prominent part.

Mr. Hume and Mr. B. Buckley complained of the omission of the ballot and gave notice that during the progress of the bill that would introduce the necessary clause.

Mr. Bright, the considering the measure in many respects defective, admitted that much of it would prove a general satisfaction.

Sir John Worsley expressed dissatisfaction with the course of the noble Lord who introduced the bill. Mr. D'Israeli pressed Lord John Russell to give the House a longer period for the consideration of the measure. He did not succeed in the bill would probably distract the attention of the public, but thought the present was the proper time for its introduction. After some further debate, leave was given to bring in the bill.

How Mars, I am Mayor of this city.

Dear Sir—Dear Sir—

I am the Mayor of this city.

It is now the 11th of February, and so far as I can see, there is no any movement in the city.
